Why Major in English?

The English Department is one of the strongest and most prestigious departments at the University of Tennessee, with an undergraduate major both engaging and versatile. The department seeks to prepare its majors for their professional and civic responsibilities within a rapidly evolving society, a globalized culture, and an increasingly information-based economy. Through the study of English, students learn

- to analyze and interpret literary and non-literary texts;
- to construct effective arguments;
- to demonstrate effective writing skills;
- to demonstrate advanced research and information literacy skills.

While developing these skills, students are also urged to discover their own critical and artistic voices by gaining proficiency in organizing complex material, addressing multiple audiences, and understanding the medium of language. Finally, in the spirit of liberal education, the study of English also contributes to satisfying society's increasing need for a citizenry skilled in critical thought and communication.

English offers a varied and challenging curriculum, introducing students to what is best in the traditional fields of English and American literature, rhetoric, and writing (creative and otherwise), while also offering courses in contemporary literature, cultural studies, cinema studies, critical theory, and linguistics. This diversity allows our majors to acquire an unusually broad range of knowledge and skills.

What Does the English Major Involve?

English majors satisfy three sets of requirements. University requirements and College of Arts and Sciences requirements are explained in the Undergraduate Catalog; college requirements are further detailed in the Curriculum Guide and Handbook, which is available from the Arts and Sciences Advising Center. English Department requirements are explained in this booklet. When becoming an English major, all students must first satisfy the prerequisite of the major by taking two 200-level classes of their choice. After satisfying the prerequisite, majors—in consultation with a departmental academic advisor—take 10 courses numbered 300 and above, distributed so as to ensure both breadth and depth of study.

An English major can choose among four concentrations:

- The concentration in Creative Writing aims to help the student develop his or her artistic voice through the writing of poetry, fiction, and drama.
- The concentration in Literature involves study and analysis of novels, poems, plays, and non-fictional prose in English.
- The concentration in Rhetoric and Writing uses both writing workshops and theoretical approaches to help the student develop a mastery of self-expression and argument.

- The concentration in Technical Communication prepares the student to write for business, industry, and science.

In addition to the four concentrations, a major may choose an individualized program (see p. 2).

After Graduation, What Next?

Because of the rich and extensive training they acquire in critical thinking, advanced reading and analysis, literary and cultural history, and oral and written communication, English majors enjoy a range of career options upon graduation. Some pursue teaching careers by applying for admission to the English Education licensure program within the College of Education. Some become freelance writers, working for themselves or in the different fields of journalism. Others enter law school, become professional editors and publishers, or embark on careers in management, public relations, advertising, sales, administration, library science, or public service. Graduates with a special interest in academic life pursue graduate study in English or related fields. Finally, students who take advantage of the department's strong technical communication course offerings pursue careers in technical writing and editing, Web page design, and other fields essential to today's changing economy. For more information about careers for English majors, contact the Center for Career Development, Student Union Level 2 (974-5435; career.utk.edu).

Special Features of the Department

A Faculty That Is Distinguished and Diverse

The English Department has a large faculty, with roughly 40 members of the professorial staff, and it has a distinguished record in both teaching and research. Sharing a commitment to education inside and outside the classroom, members of the English Department faculty regularly win college and university-wide teaching awards. Because classes are small, instructors come to know their students, participate in their growth, and work closely with their writing.

Since the English Department is composed of nationally renowned scholars and writers, students are exposed to the latest intellectual, creative, and professional developments in the discipline's many fields. In recent years English faculty members have published important books on medieval liturgical writing, Shakespeare, 18th- and 19th-century women writers, Southern literature, postmodern fiction, Native American and Indigenous rhetorics, English as a second language, and Black-centered sociolinguistics, to name a few. The department's creative writing faculty is similarly accomplished: our poets and fiction writers publish in the New Yorker and other prestigious literary journals and have written a number of highly acclaimed books.

Opportunities for Off-Campus Study

The English Department's varied program of study can be enhanced by off-campus study. In Drama in New York (English 492), students spend eight days in December or early January studying drama in performance on the Broadway and Off-Broadway stage. In Drama in Stratford and London (English 491), students spend three weeks analyzing both classical and modern plays after seeing performances and hearing lecturers by British scholars, actors, and other theater professionals.

Scholarships and Prizes

Each year, the English department recognizes student excellence with a number of scholarships and prizes. Details and application links can be found on the English Department web page, <https://english.utk.edu>. Questions may be addressed to the English Undergraduate Office, 974-5401, or to Professor Heather Hirschfeld: hhirschf@utk.edu.

Individualized Courses and Programs

For students who wish to pursue studies or projects not adequately treated in existing courses, the department offers an opportunity to participate in independent study with a faculty member. In addition to approving such courses of study, the director of undergraduate studies is also empowered to approve individualized concentrations developed by students in consultation with their advisors or mentors. These programs should be designed to achieve academically sound objectives that are not addressed by the course requirements for established concentrations.

Internships in Writing

A limited number of part-time positions involving writing, editing, and communications, both within and outside the university, can be arranged for superior students in upper-division courses. Depending on the type of work or training involved, such positions might lead to publication, academic credit, or financial compensation. Students seeking information on internship opportunities should contact the English Undergraduate Office, 974-5401.

English Honors Concentration

For students who qualify, the department offers specially designed courses at all undergraduate levels (see page 16). First-year and sophomore honors courses are enriched versions of the regular sections in composition and in American and British literature. The junior-senior honors seminar, limited to 15 students, is given every fall by a distinguished member of the faculty in an area of her or his expertise. The senior honors thesis allows a student in the honors concentration to work on an independent creative or research project under the guidance of two members of the faculty. The Ann Hight Gore Thesis Prize, a cash award, is given for the best honors thesis at the end of each spring semester. Admission to the junior-senior honors concentration is by application. To receive "Honors" in English on their transcript, a student must have a 3.25 or better overall GPA; a 3.5 or better GPA in English courses; grades of A or B in English (Honors) 398 and 498; and have completed at least 12 hours of English honors course work. Students who need more information about the program should contact the English Undergraduate Office, 974-5401 or 311 McClung Tower.

English Education and Certification for Teaching

Students who plan to be certified to teach English in secondary schools should apply for admission to the English Education Program in their junior year. Certification requires a 16-hour minor in education and a fifth-year internship. Current GPA requirements for admission to the English Education Program are a 2.7 overall GPA and a 3.0 GPA in the major. A recommended course of study for those considering a career in secondary education can be found on page 14. For more information, including how to schedule an interview for admission, students should contact the College of Education's Office of Advising and Student Services, 332 Bailey Education Complex, 974-8194.

The Minor in English

An English minor consists of at least 15 semester hours of English courses at the 300 and 400 levels. An English minor with an emphasis in Technical Communication consists of at least 15 semester hours of English courses chosen from the following: (1) at least three courses in technical communication (chosen from 360, 460, 462, or 466); (2) one course in rhetoric, writing, or linguistics, or another course in technical communication, chosen from the following list: 355, 357, 360, 371, 372, 455, 460, 461, 462, 466, 470, 471, 472, 485, 494, 495, 496; and (3) one other 300- or 400-level English course.

The Program

Declaring English as a Major

Students who intend to become English majors can declare using an online form available on the English Department's homepage, <https://english.utk.edu/> Click the image "Declare English."

How Does Advising Work?

The department has a dedicated professional advisor, Ms. Kirsten Pitcock. She meets individually with students when they enter the University or declare the major, and she continues to advise them throughout their careers. She helps students develop their academic plans through graduation; explains policies and procedures; provides information about degree requirements, academic standards, and milestones; and connects them to campus resources that promote academic success and career exploration. She also clears students for registration.

In order to benefit most from the advising session, students are strongly urged to prepare by reviewing their progress in meeting college and major requirements. This is most easily done by reviewing the DARS report. More information on advising is available through the English Undergraduate Office, 974-5401.

As an aid to registration, each semester the department posts online and publishes a packet of descriptions of the courses at the 300 and 400 levels to be offered the following semester. These descriptions contain an account of the course readings and requirements. They are most easily available on the English Department web page, <https://english.utk.edu>

Selecting a Concentration and Mentoring

Students select a concentration either when they declare the major or after they have completed their two 200-level pre-requisites. Once they have completed these pre-requisites, students are assigned a professorial faculty mentor, with whom they can discuss course selection and research and career plans.

Students will receive a letter of introduction from their mentor, and they can schedule an appointment.

Prerequisites for the Major

Two-200 level courses are prerequisite for the major.

The following sequences are recommended:
201-202; 207-208; 221-222; 231-232; 237-238.

Course Prerequisites

English 101 and 102, or the equivalents, are prerequisites of all English courses at the 200, 300, and 400 levels.

Certain upper-division courses have additional prerequisites; these are stated in the course descriptions in this booklet.

Major Requirements

The major consists of 30 hours of 300- and 400- level course-work. Courses may NOT count in more than one category. Depending on the course content, Special Topics, Major Authors, Junior–Senior Honors Seminar, and any other course with variable content may be petitioned to count in a category where it is not listed.

All majors are required to complete ten courses of 300- or 400-level English of which:

One must be pre-1660 literature (301, 321, 401, 402, 403, 404, 405, 406, 409, 410);

One must be of literature written from 1660-1900 (302, 411, 412, 413, 414, 415, 419, 420, 424, 431, 432, 433, 435);

One must be post-1900 literature (340, 345, 421, 423, 434, 436, 451, 452, 453, 454, 456, 459);

One must be in language, theory, folklore, cultural, ethnic, gender, or film studies (301, 302, 303, 306, 321, 331, 332, 333, 334, 335, 336, 339, 341, 342, 371, 372, 381, 403, 422, 439, 443, 444, 471, 472, 474, 476, 477, 479, 480, 481, 490, 496); and
One must be a capstone course (398, 443, 470, 482, 483, 485, 486, 489, 498 [honors only].

Literature

1. English 376 (or 377) should be taken at the beginning of the major
2. One 400-level course in pre-1800 literature: 401, 402, 403, 404, 405, 406, 409, 410, 411, 412, 413, 431
3. One 400-level course in American literature: 431, 432, 433, 434, 435, 436, 441, 442, 443, 444
4. One additional 400-level literature course: 401, 402, 403, 404, 405, 406, 409, 410, 411, 412, 413, 414, 415, 419, 420, 421, 422, 423, 424, 431, 432, 433, 434, 435, 436, 441, 442, 443, 444, 451, 452, 453, 454, 456, 459, 479, 480, 481, 482, 483, 486, 490, 491, 4925.
5. One upper-division English elective.

Rhetoric and Writing

1. English 355 (or 357) and any two of the following courses: 455, 470, 494, 495, 496
2. One other course in rhetoric and writing. In addition to the course listed in item one which was not taken, you may choose from the following list: 360, 363, 364, 365, 367, 368, 369, 455, 460, 461, 462, 463, 464, 466, 469, 470, 484, 490, 494, 495, 496
3. One upper-division English elective.

Technical Communication

1. English 360 and any two of the following: 460, 461, 462, 466
2. One other course in rhetoric or writing. In addition to the course listed in item one which was not taken, you may choose from the following list: 355, 357, 363, 364, 365, 367, 369, 455, 463, 464, 466, 469, 470, 484, 490, 494, 495, 496
3. One upper-division English elective.

English Course Offerings

Writing

Writing courses offer students the opportunity to improve their skills in creative, expository, and technical writing. Students learn to express themselves more effectively, and they discover the power language has to organize and develop thought. Students practice writing traditional essays, poetry, fiction, and screenplays, or they write and edit technical reports. Thus student writers gain important cognitive skills while they further their personal, academic, and professional development.

Courses in rhetoric allow students to study writing as a medium of communication and to explore the complex relationships among writer, audience, and the wider world they are seeking to understand.

Literature

Courses in literature are designed to broaden students' exposure to literary texts and to deepen their knowledge and appreciation of works of imaginative writing. Students develop skills in reading complex works from a variety of perspectives, and they enrich their understanding of the relation between literature and its historical and cultural contexts. By exposing students to a range of historical periods, authors, and genres, courses in literature introduce students to rich fields of canonical and non-canonical texts. These courses also sharpen students' abilities to analyze and write about literary works and cultural issues.

Theory and Criticism

By addressing the question of how literary works are invested with meaning, the English Department's courses in theory and criticism allow students to explore the act of reading from a variety of theoretical positions. These courses introduce students to the history of aesthetics and literary theory, as well as to more recent theoretical schools: psychoanalytic theory, feminism and gender studies, reader response, new historicism, theory and race, deconstruction, and cultural studies. Students are encouraged to understand their own reading practices and the critical assumptions that underlie them.

English Language

The courses in the English language offer students the opportunity to study the structure and function of language as a cognitive and communicative medium while focusing upon the history and structure of English as much as possible. The 300-level courses serve as general introductions, one from a historical perspective, the other from a contemporary viewpoint. After taking an introductory course, a student may explore the topics examined there in more detail by taking American English, Sociolinguistics, Teaching English as a Second Language, Language and Law, or such special topics as Appalachian English.

Folklore

Courses in folklore highlight local, national, and international culture by investigating and comparing a range of oral and written texts within their cultural and historical contexts. Theoretical and analytical approaches are complemented by the actual collecting of folklore texts.

Film

The English Department's undergraduate courses in Film Studies emphasize film as a narrative art form and aim to help students understand and write about film with clarity and insight. Each course has its own particular focus. Introduction to Film Studies, the most general course, provides a basic introduction to film history and aesthetics. Film and American Culture focuses on the aesthetic, historical, and cultural significance of movies in American society. Topics in Film Studies, a special-topics course, changes topics each time it is taught—it may concentrate on a particular film genre, a specific period or national cinema movement, one or more film directors, or some other aspect of film art. It may be taken for credit twice. All the courses include exams and written assignments, with critical analysis of individual films common in the introductory course and substantial written projects more likely in advanced courses.

Independent Study (English 493)

Students who wish to pursue studies or projects not fully treated in existing courses may work with a professor of their choice on a mutually agreed-upon special project. In order to obtain permission to register for English 493, a student must file a statement with the director of undergraduate studies (McClung Tower 311) outlining the scope of the project and the means by which it is to be evaluated. This planning statement must be signed by the professor and submitted within 10 days after the semester begins. No more than six hours credit can be obtained in this manner.

Course Descriptions

In addition to literature content knowledge, the high school English teacher is required to teach the mechanics of reading, writing, linguistics, grammar, and rhetoric. As such, the competitive applicant will also demonstrate undergraduate preparation in these areas. We recommend courses from the following list as those most likely to prepare you adequately:

Strongly suggested writing and language courses include:

ENG 355 Rhetoric and Writing

ENG 360 Technical and Professional Writing

ENG 371 Foundations of the English Language

- ENG 372 The Structure of Modern English
- ENG 460 Technical Editing
- ENG 471 Sociolinguistics
- ENG 476 Second Language Acquisition
- ENG 477 Pedagogical Grammar for ESL Teachers
- ENG 479 Literary Criticism
- ENG 495 Introduction to Rhetoric and Composition

Overall GPA in English must be 3.0 or higher.

The above suggested courses will prepare beginning teachers for standard secondary English curriculum (9th grade: genre studies; 10th grade: World Literature; 11th grade: American Literature; 12th grade: British Literature) and the Praxis Language, Literature, and Composition test required by most states for initial English teacher licensure.
